The Case of Buddy

Buddy is a golden retriever who lives in the small town of Abbeville, South Carolina. In 2015, Buddy was found wandering around a neighbor's yard, covered in blood. The neighbor called the police, who quickly realized that Buddy had led them to a gruesome murder scene.

The victim was a 62-year-old woman named Martha Ann Boswell. She had been stabbed to death in her own home.

The police quickly arrested a suspect, a man named William Crudup. Crudup had a history of violence, and he had been seen arguing with Boswell earlier that day.

Crudup was convicted of Boswell's murder and sentenced to life in prison. Buddy's discovery of the murder scene led to Crudup's arrest and conviction, and his story is a testament to the amazing abilities of these animals.

The Interviews

Murder Dog: The Interviews Vol. 1 features interviews with Buddy's owners, the police officers who investigated the case, and the forensic experts who helped solve it.

The interviews with Buddy's owners reveal the close bond that they had with their pet. They describe Buddy as a loving and loyal dog who was always there for them.

The police officers who investigated the case describe the challenges of investigating a murder with limited evidence. They credit Buddy with leading them to the murder scene and helping them to solve the case.

The forensic experts who helped solve the case describe the scientific evidence that they used to convict Crudup. They explain how Buddy's DNA was found on Crudup's clothing and how his fingerprints were found at the murder scene.

The interviews in Murder Dog: The Interviews Vol. 1 provide a fascinating look at the role that dogs can play in solving crimes and the human side of tragedy.
